Schwarzschild Bros., Holiday Selections in Gold and Silver

We are prepared to meet every demand for this happy season. Not only the very richest creations, but many handsome and appropriate gifts at moderate prices.

The fact that Christmas is only five weeks away has brought to this popular store many who appreciate the advantage of early, careful selection, thus having their selections put aside for later delivery. We cannot urge too sincerely the wisdom of this, as it enables us to serve patrons more satisfactorily to themselves.

Directive novelties in Gold Bracelets, Gold-Mounted Cambs, Best Necktaces, La Valleres, Enameled and Diamond Brooches, Silver Card Purses, etc.

Our selections of appropriate gifts for gentlemen contain an end-less number of suggestions, which combine usefulness with elegance.

Diamond Rings now shown for the first time, many new and exquisite designs in platforum settings odd shapes and artistic effects. An inusually attractive selection of solitaire engagement rings at $25.00 to $850,00.

Evarra and His Gods.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

Other selections from this author, his portrait, autograph and biographical sketch, have already been printed in this series.

This is the story of Evarra—man— Maker of Gods in lands beyond the sea. Because the city gave him of her gold. Because the city gave him of her gold.

Because the caravans brought furquoises.

Because his life was sheltered by the King.

So that no man should maim him, none should steal.

Or break his rest with babble in the streets

When he was weary after toll, he made

An image of his God in gold and pearl.

With turqueise diadem and human eyes.

A wooder in the sunshine known after. A wonder in the sunshine, known afar And worshiped by the King; but, drunk with pride, Because the city bowed to him for God, He wrote above the shrine: "Thus Gods are made, And whose makes them otherwise shall die." And all the city praised him. . . . Then he died.

Read here the story of Evarra—man—
Maker of Gods in lands beyond the sea.

Because his city had no wealth to give.

Because the caravans were spoiled afar,

Because his life was threatened by the King.

So that all men despised him in the streets,

He hacked the living rock, with sweat and tears,

And reared a God against the morning-gold. And reared a God against the merinag-gold.

A terror in the sunshine, seen afar.

And worshiped by the King; but, drunk with pride,

Because the city fawned to bring him back,

He carved upon the plinth: "Thus Gods are made,

And whose makes them otherwise shall die."

Then he company the printer of the company than the company that the company than the company that the company than the company that the company than the company than the company that the company And all the people praised him. . . . Then he died.

Read here the story of Evarra—man—
Maker of Gods in lands beyond the sea.

Because he lived among a simple folk.

Because his village was between the hills,

Because he smeared his cheeks with blood of ewes,

He cut an idol from a fallen pine.

Smeared blood upon its cheeks, and wedged a shell

Above its brows for eyes, and gave it hair

Of trailing mess, and platted straw for grown.

And all the village praised him for his craft,

And brought him butter, honey, milk and curds.

Wherefore, because the shoutings drove him mad,

He scratched upon that log: "Thus Gods are made,

And whose makes them otherwise shall die."

And all the people praised him. . . . . Then he d And all the people praised him. . . . Then he died.

Maker of Gods in lands beyond the sen.
Because his God decreed one clot of blood
Should swerve one hair's breadth from the pulse's path. Should swerve one hair's-breadth from the pulse's path And chafe his brain, Evarra mowed alone. Rag, wrapped, among the cattle in the fields, Counting his fingers, jesting with the trees, And mocking at the mist, until his God Drove him to labor. Out of dung and horns Dropped in the mire he made a montrous God. Abhorrent, shapeless, crowned with plantain tufts, And when the cattle lowed at twilight time, He dreamed it was the clamor of lost crowds, And howled among the beasts: "Thus Gods are made, And whose makes them otherwise shall die." There at the cattle bellowed. . . Then he died.

Yet at the last he came to Paradise,
And found his own four Gods, and that he wrote;
And marveled, being very near to God,
What oef on earth had made his toil God's law.
Till God said, mocking: "Mock not. These he thine."
Then cried Evarra: "I have sinned!"—"Not so.
If thou hadst written otherwise, thy Gods
Had rested in the mountain and the mine.
And I were poorer by four wondrous Gods,
And thy more wondrous law, Evarra. Thine.
Servant of shouting crowds and lowing kine."
Thereat with laughing mouth, but tear-wet eyes,
Evarra cast his Gods from Paradise. Evarra cast his Gods from Paradise. This is the story of Evarra—man— Maker of Gods in lands beyond the sea.

LYNCHES .G. VA., December L.-An harmony white man last night attempted to enter to a ladder the chamber of the daughter of Mrs. James T. Shelton, on Kneement avenue, thinking probably the motion and daughter were alone. Her son, James A. Shelton, a Main Street Street however, was there. He wated antil the latrader started up the ladder when he shot at him. The man fell, got up quickly and ran. Mr. Shelton fired at him three times from another window as he ran. He thinks he struck the man, but he managed to get away. Unless it was to gain access to the young lady's room, no motive for the attempt can be assigned. The effort of the man was made in a short distance of an electrifight, under bright moonlish and within a point where a street car passes each six minutes.
